

About Roche

Australian Pharmaceutical Business

Roche Products Pty Limited, the Australian pharmaceutical division of the international Roche Group, has been committed to improving the health and wellbeing of people in Australia for over 60 years.

In 1942, Roche sold its first products in Australia, distributing from premises in central Sydney. The company has been headquartered on 8 hectares of land in Dee Why/Cromer, NSW, since the 1960s. The Roche site includes facilities for offices, distribution, and previously manufacturing.

Today, the company is dedicated to the clinical development, registration, sales, marketing and distribution of innovative pharmaceutical medicines. Over the last two decades, Roche has become a leading specialist in biotechnology focused on developing medicines in oncology (cancer), immunology, ophthalmology, infectious diseases and neuroscience.

Roche invests around 10 billion US Dollars each year in research and development worldwide, including approximately 36 million Australian Dollars in pharmaceutical research and development in Australia.

Roche has an industry-leading pharmaceutical pipeline with 70 compounds in clinical development.

Australian patients have access to around 40 Roche medicines, and the company is the leading provider of cancer medicines in Australia by sales.

Roche has over 350 employees working in 5 states across Australia.

Roche has been ranked the number one healthcare company in the Dow Jones Sustainability Indices for the past eight years.

Further information about Roche is available on our local website: roche-australia.com or via Roche Corporate Affairs: australia.corporate_affairs@roche.com.